J. C. Waller, his wife and two children, who were from Burlington,

Vt., to the Tonga country to take part in Bishop Taylor's "self-supporting mission."

Wife returned and came to New York.

Mr. Waller describes the enterprise as a complete failure, and thinks he was lucky to escape alive. He says there is no chance for missionary work, as the struggle for exsistence occupies all the time of the unfortunate members of the colony. The climate breeds sickness; the soil is not productive, and white men can not endure the necessary labor. The mission is not well managed, supplies are inadequate. The stemmer which east Americans so much money is lying a wreck on the banks of the river. If Christians would help the heathen at home they would do more good.

Senator Clark expresses the following to the tariff reduction: "It is impossible to tell much about it. The measure must originate in the House. I can't tell what Randall will do. The House Democrats have as yet had no conference with the senators on the subject. I don't think any thing can be determined till the Ways and Means Committee is made up, for, of couse, the man at the head of that committee will have charge of the tariff measure.

Our committeemen are ready for a conference. I think there will be a conference in the tariff committee, probably on the 20th of January.

THE RIVER OF DREAMS.

There's a river that flows to a lullaby song,
That never was set to an earthly time;
There the days are bright, and the years are long.

Forever summer, and always June;

The path that leads to the morning awhar streams.

And we call it the beautiful River of Dream.

Ah! never mortal foot hath trod

Its shining waters, or gazed its low;

But the dreamers have trodden it.

The fair fons of the long ago—

Youth's argosies, by the sweet winds blown—

Sail softly on the port Unknown.

For the vanished joys of our lives are there—

The bright thoughts that were ours of old,

For the golden hours, when we were young;

Had doffed and varnished their virgin gold;

Had turned to ashes the hope and trust

Of the loves and faiths that are dead and dust.

In mist and shadow, long ago—

The path that leads to the river side;

And in visions, and far away;

We see its mystical waters glide;

But flowing gone, with measured song

We leave the shore, and the long boat!

And gazing wistfully, spent and lame;

With hearts that falter and feet that fail,

We know, O, brothers, we yet shall find

The path that leads within the veil,

And, through the mist and the shadow far away,

We shall come to the shore again, some day!

We shall drift away with the golden tide;

Through dancing ripples and sunny foam,

To the land of the calm and the plowfed,

There we shall rest, and the world be long!

For the River of Dreams is a surging song,

Is but the path, through shadow and night,

That leads us into the Heavenly beth!

CHAPTER I.

URLEY stepped out in the February dusk after spending a dull winter at his house over between him and the western sky, and he paused a moment, as he did, to look at it when he saw a single lamp glowing dimly in the distance.

"Yes, when Thurerry and I began our housekeeping, I had but little to earn."

"Brother, what is your fortune?" asked Thurerry.

"I can't tell you, then. I teach the school in this district, you know," she explained.

"Oh," remarked Urley, to show that his question had been answered.

"Yes, when Thurerry and I began our housekeeping, I had but little to earn."

"Brother, what is your fortune?" asked Urley.

"Thurerry is my brother," she continued. "He is two years older than I am. He is working for a farmer across Black Hollow, and saving all his money."

"That being the case," observed the young man, smiling, "the will come day he will be a rich man."

"Oh, no," she replied, with puffed up superiority. "But it is need to be really working toward an object."

At that moment a cap resounded on the door of the schoolroom. There were no bells in the Holmes' house, so the newcomer was distinctly visible to Urley as soon as the door opened to admit him. Entering, he took his coat off, and went to a nearby hooks-up, where he hung it, but those men who the college town despised their place of living; while, on the opposite side, all hill farmers voted against appropriations for the improvement of the town.

The Holmes' home, though it might be deemed here and there and down about hills stills-paved the college town's steeps. Below, culture was life's law. Up hill, amidst farms and scattered school-houses, dwelt the sons of people who had not quite mastered the art of refinement and courtesy may dwell side by side in a city, so had Greenhurst; and the hills clomb each other several generations without perceptibly lessening the gulf between them. However, such existed the hill farmers, who the college town despised their place of living; while, on the opposite side, all hill farmers voted against appropriations for the improvement of the town.

Urley stepped across the unwarmed floor, and the voice of Jesus' wife came faintly to the Sabbath, while she placed the tubs and soap, and dried her hands. Mrs. McArchie had been in health since Pentecost, when she awoke from her sleep on Saturday evening until five o'clock on Sunday evening; and if she intended night service this was a free-will offering to Heaven.

"I heard you and thought it was Mr. McArchie."

"Gurley, of the Meadons farm. I hope I haven't startled you a little while they were here."

"No; if you wait a little while I am keeping house. I promised to take care of him and strain the milk."

Toddies, recognizing a play-fellow at the top of the stairs, shook a tin ring and uttered remarks in a dialect peculiar to himself.

"May I come down and help you?" inquired the boy.

"What do you want?" he asked.

"If you would please lift the pots I would be a help," he replied. "Toddies keeps stepponing on my dress."

A GRATEFUL SAVAGE.

My Great-Grandmother's New Year's Callow.

Almost every child has a grandmother, and not many have great-grandmothers; grandmother's mother, I have none, she is the dearest old lady in the world.

She wears a black gown, a little white muslin handkerchief over her shoulders, and a white lace cap over her brown false front, that old ladies used to wear.

She has fine gray eyes, and nice teeth—all her own, too—and is ninety years old. She reads the papers, and knows all that is going on, and worries over the accidents just as much as if our old folks were in them.

She is fond of politics, for she and grandfather—dead this thirty years—used to keep a roadside tavern, where all the famous lawyers stopped on their way to it, where the county court was held. Daniel Webster had stopped at the tavern, and many other distinguished men.

Granma loves to tell of those days while she knits in the firelight. She moves her needles as swift as a machine, and can knit in the dark. She taught me to knit, too; but I think she found a stupid pupil, though she never said so. She does all kinds of knitting, scurts, mittens, wristers and stockings, and when she was young she used to weave, and made her own linen for sheets and bedding when she was married.

One grandmama visited Boston; only thirty-six she was, yet remembers every detail of her visit. Her uncle, an ex-Governor, gave grand balls and parties, and this silly country girl had a glimpse of the famous manners and gay life of Boston's old aristocracy.

But she loved the country best, and married a neighbor's son, and went with him to the unbroken forest way up in the north of Maine, and lived a pioneer life in all its hardships of want and cold.

She had eight children, and made every stitch of their clothing, as well as her husband's, and taught them, too. There was no schoolhouse near, and her only book was the Bible, and out of this they learned to read and spell. She had all the work a farmer's wife must do, and I know they knew little rest. There are few such workers nowadays.

Granma's best stories are about Indians. There were roving bands of them in Maine fifty and sixty years ago, and some times they were not peacefully disposed, especially when farms were isolated and far from neighbors' help. How many times they plundered and burned, and how many families they murdered and scalped, will never be known; for who could tell, in the depths of a forest, what a blackened clearing meant? It might be only a place burned by those mysterious forest fires; who was to know it was the ashes of a once happy home?

A few years ago grandma was down to our house on her regular winter's visit, and she found us girls much excited about New Year's calls. In a small country town, few people receive calls on New Year's Day, but another had not done so since we were too little to remember. The last day of the old year we were talking with grandma in the hour before tea, when it was too dark to read or sew, and too light for lamps. Of course grandma was knitting, this time a big pair of mittens for an old man that used to saw wood for us. Grandma had noticed his mittens were ragged, and finding he had no one to care for him, took it upon herself, and gave him three pairs of good yarn stockings before she went away, and he said:

"Now mark you, one of the good old-fashioned sort, the Lord reward ye."

"You never heard about my New Year's call, did you girls?" said grandma.

"No," we cried, eagerly.

"Was it in Boston, at the Governor's?" asked Jen.

"It must have been grand there," said Manie, half-sarcastically.

"No," replied grandma, smiling on pretty Manie. "It was in the first days of my married life. I was married you know, when I was only seventeen. I stayed at home with mother that year; then Joseph and I, and your great-uncle Rufus, two-months-old baby, moved up to the north of where we'd been living and pretty nigh on the border of Canada.

"We were twenty miles from neighbors, and found our way to them by spotted trees—trees we'd marked, you know, for the woods are confusing."

"It was lonely like for me; but Joseph seldom left the farm, and then only to go to the mill, thirty miles away, to get our corn and wheat ground."

"I used to be afraid sometimes, for the circuit-riders—preachers that travel round and round and much good—would stop over night and tell us stories about the Indians, and sometimes I'd see the red creatures hiding in the woods, trying to steal a cow or calf. Joseph always went armed, to be ready for 'em.'

"The winters were terribly cold, and I used to pity the squaws and children that would come our way, and they were always welcome to a shelter in my house, and the men, too, if they were peaceable, for husband didn't believe in aggravating 'em."

"Well, the New Year's Day of the first twelve months we'd lived there, Joseph went to the mill with a load. He couldn't get back that night, for the wolves were thick in winter and barking in the dark. It was so quiet in the woods snows echoed for miles."

"After what seemed an hour to me, but couldn't have been more than ten minutes, the yell grew fainter and fainter off."

"He turned from the door then, and piling more logs on the fire, laid down and went to sleep."

"I set there and watched him through that terrible night of the New Year, till daylight. I'll never forget it, and see myself now sitting in the fireplace, looking at him sleeping on the floor, and rocking the baby to keep it from waking him."

"At daylight he waked up, stretched himself; then he looked at me, holding something in his hand."

"I got the cow milked and fed, and locked the door for the night. I took a good look around at the trees. It was getting dark, and there were queer shadows in the woods, and I felt more scared than ever."

"After the baby was asleep, it was lone-some enough sitting there before the fire, and the tall candle seeming to burn dimmer than usual. I kept thinking I heard steps outside, and the icy snow-crackling, and sometimes I shook with dread and terror."

"At last I got up, thinking it was moonlight, and I'd better if I looked out the window. I raised the curtain, and, dear oh, me! there was an Indian face pressed close against the pane."

"All painted hideous he was, with red and blue, and a terribly ugly feather on his head and a long gun, and was rifled out for fighting."

"I thought I should die; but I didn't scream, though I knew the door had no other fastening than a bar of wood that could break."

"In a minute he came to the door, pushing hard against it, and the bar snapped like a twig."

"In he came. Over six feet high he was, and seemed to be the biggest man I ever saw. He was wrapped in a blanket, and had clothes made of skins on. He had the long gun and a big knife with him."

"I caught up the baby and ran behind the bed. He took scarcely any notice of me, however, but shut the door, and went and warmed himself. Then he hauled the quilt off the bed, and fixed it over the window."

"I held my breath, wondering what he meant to do."

"The baby, waking up, gave a little cry, and he turned and drew his knife across his throat, meaning, I thought, by threat, to kill the child."

"I hustled the little one to sleep again, and he, dragging his blanket before the fire, sat down all in a heap, grunting like a pig, from comfort. I crept behind the bed and watched him."

"Then he pointed to his mouth, to tell me he was hungry. The victuals were down in the cellar, and I didn't go and leave him with the baby. But he kept a-politing and getting mad; so, at last, I mustered courage, and took the candle and brought up a great milk-pan full of doughnuts, a piece of pork, and a jing of vinegar—that was all we had."

"Bless me, how the creature did eat! Every doughnut went into him, then the pork raw, and washing it down with the vinegar, as if it had been sweater than new cider."

"When he was through, he went to the door, and listened awhile; then he went back to the fire, and went to sleep."

"I set behind the bed, trembling and watching him. Just think, girls, how you would have felt there alone with that heathen, that couldn't talk your language, and that you couldn't say a word to; and alone in the woods where he could kill you, and no one to help you."

"I prayed to myself, and, by and by, crept over and got my knife, and read it. After a spell, I looked up, and there he was, sitting and watching me with a kind of wondering awe on his face."

"Then he got up and listened at the door again. Quick as a flash, he blew out the candle, and flattened the fire with a log."

"I wondered what he meant to do in the dark, and I lunged the baby closer, and it cried a little, and he turned and laid his big hand over its mouth. He meant me to keep it still."

"He stood there listening, listening. Then he bent his ear to the floor, and backed me. I dared not draw back; besides, if he wanted to murder me, he'd chances enough before."

"So went to the door and listened too, listening to the moans of the hungry wolf, and the faint sound of a yell of a wolf. An Indian yell of war, more horrible than any animal's that ever was."

"It seemed to come nearer and nearer, and I could hear him breathe hard in the dark. It was so quiet in the woods snows echoed for miles."

"After what seemed an hour to me, but couldn't have been more than ten minutes, the yell grew fainter and fainter off."

"He turned from the door then, and piling more logs on the fire, laid down and went to sleep."

"I set there and watched him through that terrible night of the New Year, till daylight. I'll never forget it, and see myself now sitting in the fireplace, looking at him sleeping on the floor, and rocking the baby to keep it from waking him."

"At daylight he waked up, stretched himself; then he looked at me, holding something in his hand."

"I got the cow milked and fed, and locked the door for the night. I took a good look around at the trees. It was getting dark, and there were queer shadows in the woods, and I felt more scared than ever."

"After the baby was asleep, it was lone-some enough sitting there before the fire, and the tall candle seeming to burn dimmer than usual. I kept thinking I heard steps outside, and the icy snow-crackling, and sometimes I shook with dread and terror."

"She was mighty pleased, and smiled with her white teeth, and her black eyes—like a mother's—shining with the pride all mothers have."

"'Up, pupoose,' he says, and picks up his gun and blanket, and went out."

"Then I knew. He was a friendly Indian, and most likely that baby's father."

"In the afternoon I saw Joseph coming on horseback at a gallop, with his face as white as chalk. He thought he'd find the house burned, and me and baby killed."

"You don't distress yourself, mother," said the young man. "Perhaps we can save her."

"Sister Molly," he called up the stairway, for Mary was writing in her room. "Won't you please come and walk with your poor, tired brother this evening? The moon will soon be up, and the air is delightful."

"Yes, Harry, I will come," said the young girl, tripping down the stairs with a scarf thrown lightly about her shoulders. "Poor boy! He confines himself too closely to business."

The brother and sister sauntered slowly down the village street.

"The moonlight is so beautiful upon the water, sister. We will go down to the river-side. See, Anna is just peeping above the tree-tops. How beautiful!"

"But something else just then attracted Mary Golding's attention. They were passing the hotel, and she heard her lover's voice amidst the drunken clamor which filled the air. Could that be Clarence?"

In the glare of the light she could see distinctly a tall, graceful young man toasting glass after glass of brandy down his throat. She heard profane and ribald words, such as she had never heard before, spoken in his well-known voice. "Poor Harry! do you see? Do you hear?" she gasped, clutching his arm for support. "Merciful Heaven! can that be Clarence Morton?"

"My dear sister, this is no new thing," said her brother, clasping his arm about her. "I have seen this too often to be surprised. Poor Clarence! What can he be thinking of to destroy himself?"

"And not only that, but do you see the man next about him? I am sorry, dear brother, but I must go home," said Henry Golding, turning her steps homeward.

The moonlight upon the waters was forgotten, and Harry Golding was singing a glad to Deum in his heart that at last his loved sister saw her lover as others saw him.

A tall, broad-shouldered young man passed them as they walked silently along.

"Whither away, Barton? An armful of books, as usual," said Henry Golding. "Do you never rest?"

"Never before I am weary," replied the young man, bowing respectfully to Miss Mary. "I hope to graduate this term."

"A splendid young man," said Henry Golding to his sister when Mr. Barton had passed out of hearing. "He will make his mark in the world."

But Mary's heart was too full to heed her brother's words.

The studious young man had shown much intentness, but her heart had been pre-occupied and she scarcely knew him.

Clarence Morton was greatly astonished when, at his next visit to his betrothed wife, she gave him back his ring, saying:

"All is ended between us. I saw you last evening at the hotel."

He knew too well that rounstrance or entreaty was useless, and left growling that it was "deuced hard if a young fellow couldn't have a bit of fun."

The "bit of fun" lasted through Clarence Morton's worthless life, and he died unlaunched and scarcely known, while the penniless young student had been for years one of the leading citizens of Franconia. Mary Golding has for more than a score of years

TEMPERANCE.

A "BIT OF FUN."

How a Young Lady Was Saved from Becoming a Drunkenard's Wife.

There is no lovelier village in the Empire State than Franconia, though this is not its real name, neither shall I give the real names of the characters who all figure in the following story, though they are real people and yet upon the stage of action.

"I am so sorry, mother, that Mary is so devoted in young Morton," said Henry Golding, as he came into Mrs. Golding's pleasant parlor, one summer evening.

"What do you mean, my son?" asked the mother, looking up from her sewing. "I had always supposed that Mr. Morton was a gentleman. He certainly belongs to one of our best families."

"That is true, mother dear, but this 'gentleman,' is not one of our first families," is at this very moment half-drunk at the hotel and acting like a fool."

"Harry, you're not misinformed?" said the mother, looking up with a horrified expression.

"My eyes do not deceive me, mother," the son replied. "I have known Morton's failing for a long time, but Mary is firm as a rock. She will not budge from my thing to the prejudice of her lover."

Mrs. Golding was sorely troubled.

"Drunkenness is such a shameful vice," she said. "When a man once degrades himself so much, what can restore him? To think of our sweet Mary a drunken wife! Oh! I can not, nor can bear it." And the tears fell plentifully.

"Do not distress yourself, mother," said the young man. "Perhaps we can save her."

"Sister Molly," he called up the stairway, for Mary was writing in her room. "Won't you please come and walk with your poor, tired brother this evening? The moon will soon be up, and the air is delightful."

"Yes, Harry, I will come," said the young girl, tripping down the stairs with a scarf thrown lightly about her shoulders. "Poor boy! He confines himself too closely to business."

"A man who takes a little wine under the notion that he is going to be strengthened by it and brought up for a special effort is entirely at sea, because there is nothing that so completely disturbs the functions as to produce disorder of mind like strong drink. I do not care whether we go to the rifle or to rowing, or to an operation performed by a surgeon, or to drive an engine or a coach, or to ride in a race, or to conduct an orchestra—wherever presence of mind is required—all through we never get anything but embarrassment from alcohol. Those most free from a substance which produces much disturbance, the reason is clear. The physiological effect is to relax, to destroy tension, to take power from every part of the body."

IN ONE CITY.

A Minister's Figures—Between $16,000,000 and $20,000,000 a Year for Liquor.

What do you suppose is the annual saloon bill of Brooklyn? You will hardly believe until I prove it to you. It is between sixteen and twenty millions of dollars. A sum so vast that we must needs break it up into smaller parts. First, let me show you how I reach the result.

"There are 3,000 licensed saloons in Brooklyn. Now it is under and over an even thousand, so I put these three thousand saloons at $15 per day each, making a grand total of $16,425,000 per annum.

This is easily within the line. It is more likely $20,000,000. Now, in order to get this enormous amount of money before you, I present you the table. This enormous sum of money represents the following values:

$26,000 bbls. flour at $6..... $1,560,000

125,000 overalls at $5..... 625,000

230,000 dress coats at $10..... 2,300,000

63,000 pairs boots and shoes at $5..... 315,000

330,000 yards of cloth at $1..... 330,000

450,000 yards of flannel at 50 cents..... 225,000

50,000 yards of calico at 25 cents..... 12,500

50,000 yards of linsey-woolsey at $1..... 50,000

100,000 bushels of flour at $1..... 100,000

Build 1,000 houses at $1,000 each..... 1,000,000

Build a free museum..... 100,000

Total..... $20,000,000

Now let us suppose that the city of Brooklyn should receive every year an order to manufacture the above articles of food and build every year the number of school-houses, churches, asylums, homes, museums, and furnish the stipulated number of library books. Instead of the order to sell so much liquor, what would not be the added prosperity of our city?—Irish World.

Drunkenness and Labor Troubles.

Mr. Powderly, in a recent interview in the New York Herald, is reported as saying: "There is no disgrace deeper and more marked than the disgrace that hovers around the drunkard. They impose upon us in the order. They bring on trouble between employers and honest working-men, who go to work drunk, are discharged, and sobering up, they appear before their assemblies and present their grievances. On one side is hired, and the condemned man. Are we justified in keeping such imbeciles with us? Can we expect men who willfully neglect their duty as employees and as willfully delude their brothers-workmen? Yet I myself am called upon frequently to take a hand in the settlement of labor troubles attributable to this cause. Recently I had occasion to interfere in a dispute of large proportions, wherein the hands sought to sustain one of their number who had been discharged. He will make his mark in the world."

But Mary's heart was too full to heed her brother's words.

The studious young man had shown much intentness, but her heart had been pre-occupied and she scarcely knew him.

Clarence Morton was greatly astonished when, at his next visit to his betrothed wife, she gave him back his ring, saying:

It Kills Presence of Mind.

An authority on the subject of the effects of alcohol on the human system says:

"A man who takes a little wine under the notion that he is going to be strengthened by it and brought up for a special effort is entirely at sea, because there is nothing that so completely disturbs the functions as to produce disorder of mind like strong drink. I do not care whether we go to the rifle or to rowing, or to an operation performed by a surgeon, or to drive an engine or a coach, or to ride in a race, or to conduct an orchestra—wherever presence of mind is required—all through we never get anything but embarrassment from alcohol. SPENCER COOPER : EDITOR.

HAZEL GREEN, KY.:
FRIDAY, : January 6, 1888.

The first message of Gov. Buckner seems to have impressed the people and the press very favorably, and we regret that space forbids the publication of it. However, the Louisville Courier-Journal and the Lexington Press, two of our esteemed exchanges, each contain a comprehensive review of the document, and we herewith reproduce them:

Courier-Journal: The first message of Gov. Buckner to the General Assembly of Kentucky is a straightforward, mainly deliberate document—such a message as one dares to expect from the Governor's administration had let the people to expect. Whether one shall agree with all the suggestions of the message or not, none can doubt that Gov. Buckner has failed to state explicitly what he believes is best for the State. He does not hesitate to say that, in seeking a wrong, he moves directly toward and calls the attention of the Senators and Representatives to it, that they may take the proper steps toward its removal. His denunciation of crime, and stinging words of disapproval when referring to court cases which have come under his duty, have long witnessed the uncheckered deeds of lawless men in certain sections of Kentucky, and mourned because means for bringing them to justice were useless in the hands of incapable or unwilling officials. The message, in pointing out this failing, goes far enough to indicate the course of his administration, but few words that may be devolved to it in this space are insufficient to a proper review.

Lexington Press: The message of governor Buckner was communicated to both Houses of the General Assembly yesterday afternoon. It is rather brief for a document of the character, occupying only half a page in its reading. The following are the most important points taken upon:

It recommends the enactment of several laws, severally punishing attempted assassination, from ambush, whether injury results or not. Earliest attention is given to the Revenue Act of 1886, and recommends the enactment of laws as shall prevent a like state of affairs in future, and reflecting on the strength of the military commandant's report upon the conduct of the Judge of circuit.

It recommends that the Agricultural Commission be placed in charge of a Board, to be constituted for that purpose, to assist the Board of Agriculture.

That a Department of Justice be created to be placed under the direction of the Attorney General, whose duty it shall be to frequently consult with and virtually direct the movements of the Commonwealth's Attorneys throughout the state.

He recommends that the Railroad Commission be so remodeled with greatly increased powers, as to consist of but one Commissioner in charge of a bureau to be located in Frankfort with Deputy Commissioner's subordinate to the Commissioner.

It funds the Revenue Laws and mildly suggests that some amendment may be needed. It strongly recommends an appropriation for the completion of the Capitol Buildings at Frankfort. It strongly urges the abolition of classed examinations in the Agricultural and Mechanical College, and such other changes as shall make it conform, to the uses of the Governor's expression, to the purposes of its creation; that it be transformed strictly into a school of technology and science. While the Governor does not in terms recommend the abolition of the female department of education, it is certainly easily capable of that construction.

Thousands of people suffer with backache, not knowing that in most cases, it is a symptom of diseased kidneys and liver, which phlebotomy and leeches cannot help. Dr. J. G. McLean's Liver and Kidney Balsm, $1.00 per bottle. Sold by G. B. Swango, Hazel Green.

P. T. Barnum's Letter to the Boys. Mr. Barnum, the great showman, is at present engaged in writing a story for the young folks, the opening chapters of which appear in the columns of the New York Family Story Paper, issued Dec. 10th.

MY YOUNG FRIENDS: I am now approaching the last few months of my life, and in a number of nations, can't remain with you much longer. There are some lessons I have learned during my long life which cannot be impressed too strongly on the rising generation. All of you like stories, so I will tell you a story in which I can most forcibly teach these lessons. I will tell you the virtues which every American boy can and should possess. You will find "My Plucky Boy Tom," a lad whom you will like, and you may be sure that his "Adventures in India" will interest and thrill you, and make you feel who you are through that we have been glad to read a good deal more about him.

Ever your friend,

HERE AND THERE

Look out for the Red Cross on your paper. It denotes that it is up-to-date and renewed at once the paper will stop coming.

Rev. Mr. Eklar preached at the Methodist Church in this place last Sunday.

We regret that space forbids the publication of our regular Colored Man's letter.

Hon. J. M. Kash, who has been confined to his home for sometime with rheumatism, was on the street Tuesday.

Again we have to forego the pleasure of publishing a letter because the person who wrote it did not sign their name.

Rev. Eugene P. Mickel will preach at the Presbyterian Church in this place on Sunday evening and evening, at usual hours.

A recent advertiser, writing from Mt. Sterling, says, "I have concluded not to advertise any more until spring, at which time you may be assured I shall give you a good advertisement."

If you are interested in the Public Sale for East and West, to take place at Bathwell on the 26th of this month, you had better pay the charges, or your goods will be sacrificed.

A long letter from Salyerville arrived very unexpectedly on Friday night, and we are compelled to omit it for this week, having previously paid and set up most of the matter for this issue.

Hon. W. O. Mize returned from Frankfort Saturday evening, having been defeated for the position he sought by "a combination." As the late Jack Billings would have put it, "politics is探花."

M. C. Marion, whose advertisement appears in the newly opened school at Campton last Monday, with forty school children, and he sends us word, I attach one half of them to my advertisement in THE HERALD."

Have you read our advertisement in regard to change of name and price? We press out our words while we may, so that the books are no longer open for credit, open only for settlement, rest freely. This applies to every customer without distinction. J. T. & F. DAY, Jan. 6, 1858.

Rev. J. T. Pieratt on Sunday began a meeting at the Murphy school-house in Morgan county, which will be protracted over Sunday and may be longer. He was home Monday to see "Ellen" and change his brain, but turned only a little white.

The post office inspector for this district of Kentucky could do nothing for people in Kentucky to have the mail forwarded more promptly. Out of seven daily papers due this office on Wednesday night not one arrived. Where is the fault? It is not with me, some postmaster is keeping them out for his own satisfaction.

The Transylvania Printing Company, of Lexington, has an advertisement in this issue to which the attention of all who need blank books or loose leaves is especially invited. J. T. & F. Day recently had a set of books made by this company, with which they are much pleased, both as to workmanship and price.

The Kentucky editor who offers to send his paper to any one who will bring him a bushel of coal, may well say: "A breath can make us, as a breath has made us, and we eat for strength to combat the contemptible flings of the metropolitan press at the mountain people, i.e., we fight stuck with stench."

Strayed on Sunday—Thursday night, Dec. 20, 1857, from the stable of H. S. Morris, Morgan county, one Sorrel Mare, about 8 years old; away backed, small star in fore head, and seems a little lame in one hind leg, and a somewhat awkward gait. She is large, and a person bringing her reward may be entitled to her whereabouts. Jan. 6, 1858. J. S. WHEELER.

Our regular Maytown letter arrived too late for publication, but we note that W. T. Day had his barn destroyed by a few light slugs, supposed to have been the work of an incendiary. Our correspondent, who required all the men and women in town and the use of all the buckets to prevent Mr. Day's house going with the barn. By extraordinary effort, however, the latter was saved.

The Christian and Methodist churches of this place have been holding a series of union meetings for weeks past, the main feature of which has been the discussion of that old old chestnut, "slavery," along which there has been and ever will be a difference of opinion. Our reverend friends will do well to remember the lines of Butler:

"He that complies against his will,
Is of his own opinion still."

However, we hope in this instance that in the end they may realize the truth of these lines,

"And little quarrels prove prove To be but few records of love."

In union there is strength, and in community like-minded persons should feel himself in his neighbor's brother, and all should stand together for good in the Master's cause. We regard them all as friends, and hope to be so regarded by them, but fearing the result of controversy, kindly admonish them.

We start a new department this week under the caption, "All over the world in a week," in which your attention is especially invited. If we have omitted any news items in getting it up, we do not know it. Realizing that very many of our readers take no paper but THE HERALD, we propose to make it this year far more interesting than it has ever been before. To this end, the department referred to will be found full of fresh, crisp news items—interesting congressional and historical—every week. This will be a beginning year and all who wish to keep posted in the progress of our country should take THE HERALD. Eastern Kentucky, can so nearly supply all the wants of a subscriber at the price, and everybody should take it. One dollar pays the bill, and Cooper pays the postage, cash or its equivalent must come before we will be put upon the books.

In this year eighteen and eighty-eight, We'll take the cash, and keep no slate.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The language of the mid-sized village in January, 1858, will become possibly necessary to wind up my affairs, but I am particularly anxious upon those who owe me money to make payment as soon as possible, and make settlement. It is expected and demanded at the hands of those in office to make payment as soon as possible, and make arrangement for me to return open accounts longer, hence we hope no man will be forced to refund what he has received. In writing to our friends here, we hope they will say to us, we respectfully solicit a kind consideration of the new arrangement highly satisfactory to the public in every detail.

Very Respectfully,

J. T. & F. DAY,
Hazel Green, Ky., Dec. 15th, 1857.

Mr. J. G. Trimble, in a private letter to me on date of Jan. 1st, says: "We will have a large railroad meeting on our day on Thursday night, at which the agent of Mr. Huntington will submit a proposition to the citizens of our county, having in view the extension of the Coal road to Jackson, via Old Green, and should we agree upon terms, a large force will commence the construction of it early in the spring. The prospect of making railroads into the coal fields of Eastern Kentucky are much more favorable at present than at any time heretofore."

"Nobady's Parting" is requested, and added that the patronage of the place indicated in his letter does not justify the publication, and would be of no interest to the general reader. When he comes in working up some interest we'll gladly accommodate him in that line.

Now is what we seek, and news which will be of the greatest interest to the greatest number is what we wish. We return thanks for his interest in our behalf, but for the reasons mentioned, must decline the letter, though we shall make a few extracts by way of heads.

Mr. C. H. Herndon, of this place, went to town on Monday last in the discharge of his duties as commissioner to inspect local newspapers, but he was suddenly attacked with sore eyes and compelled to remain home on Tuesday. His suffering considerably with pain, and his eyes are inflamed, but he thinks he will be able to attend court at Campton on Monday next. We expect to record his affliction and know that his friends everywhere will sympathize with him. In our next issue we hope to record the fact that he is himself again.

The Courier-Journal of Dec. 20th, referring to John Harvey, one of our esteemed Brethren above, pays him a courteous compliment in the following editorial notice: "The Kentuckian on the Bald Fork of Troublesome, who rides twenty miles every week to sell his newspaper, is an honor to his State and deserves a free pass to the Commercial and Industrial Exhibition. There ought to be that kind of distinction."

What an example worth of emulation.

How you may get THE HERALD without money.—Bring us—

Twenty pounds of pork; or Ten pounds of jerked bacon; or Ten pounds of Irish potatoes; or Five bushels of sand turnips; or

Ten good chickens; or Ten pounds of good corn; or Ten pounds of good flour; or

Any person bringing us any of the above in the quantity named will receive the paper until January 1st, 1858; for half the quantity we will send it half the time.

J. T. & F. Day shipped 3500 feet of walnut lumber from this place Monday, at the cost of which eight wagons and teams were required, at a cost of about $35.00, for transportation to Rathwell. The same money would pay the carriage to New York over a railroad, yet it is small pay for the wagons. Indeed were it not for the return loads, they could not afford to haul it at any reasonable price.

If you desire to make Name or wedding present, and desire something in the jewelry or silverware line, we think we can make it interesting to buy now. We have plain substantial goods, fancy articles, and novelties, and can furnish them to you at prices which we can duplicate them before Nimes. Gold watches and diamonds at prices no one can duplicate. Otto W. Snider, the manufacturing jeweler, Lexington, Ky. Writer for prices.

MARRIED.—At the residence of his bride's father, F. M. Jones, near White Oak, Morgan County, Sunday, Dec. 23d, George Adams to Miss Nira E. Jones, Rev. John Adams officiating. We wish the happy couple a long life of peace and prosperity, and the best wishes of the "Devil" goes with them.

Rev. J. T. Pieratt closed his meeting at Long Branch church, in Morgan County, on Sunday last at 11 o'clock. The meeting was in progress for about eleven days, and the result was eleven additions to the church. Much interest was manifested by the people throughout the meeting.

Any and everything that can be exhibited with new type, best class, pressed and fine paper, in the hands of skilled mechanics, may be had at the lowest rates, and we will pay any man in Eastern Kentucky to get his printing at THE HERALD offices. Send for estimates, and state exactly what you want.

SITUATION.

SICKHORN, Dec. 31.—James H. Sickhorn passed through here Friday.

He informs me that the company he sold his land to will be at his house in a few days to survey and pay for the tract. We hope he will locate in Wolfe County. We have room for him and many other such men.

Liliburn Graham commenced a select school in Lee City last Monday. He is a fine teacher and a splendid school master, and we are satisfied the pupils will get value received for their money.

Cornelius Tanher, near this place, has been dangerously ill with a threat disease, but we understand he is improving.

We are glad to learn that John Tanher, of Breathitt, is out again after a spell of fever.

To Denver in One Night.

On December 4, 1887, the Burlington, C. D. & Q. R. R., inaugurated a fast train service to follow its Fast Express train down the mountains to a Number One passenger Union depot, on the Canal and Adams at 26th, Chicago, at 12:30 p. m. and runs to Denver, and, arriving at 12:30 p. m., from Chicago to Denver in thirty-four hours. This train arrives at Omaha at 3:30 a. m., making a stop at Council Bluffs, Iowa. Corresponding two trains from Denver to Chicago. Direct connection made to and from St. Louis with their respective railroads. Trains run by the C. D. & Q. R. R. for San Francisco and Pacific coast points. Super-expenses, cost of living, etc., included. Expenses of buying cars and coaches. From Chicago to Omaha and Council Bluff to Denver without change. Men served on regular basis. No better or more reliable service can be had for West on the Missouri River. Omaha passengers will be pleased to remain in their present place of abode. The C. D. & Q. R. R. can be obtained by any agent. Ticket good for one year from date of issue or until May 1st.

OUR HOSPITAL CHILD SICKNESS.

Miss Mrs. Smith to her surprise, Mrs. Jacobs, as the author of a child's sickness came across the garden from a neighbor's house. "What kind of a woman have you for a neighbor?" she asked. "A very nice woman," replied Mrs. Davis. "She is one of the most tender mothers in existence. But you never believe in the old wives' tales of disease, do you?"

Childs needs physio, the fills a room with some numerous doses, lays the little victim flat on his back, and then lets him lie there to leach his month for breath, when conveys the dreadful news. Then come the drops, the ointments, the salves, the liniments, "My dears! I have no time to play with my patients. They are effective without being harsh, and are as easy to take as sugar cubes. Give them to thy children." "And so on," said Mrs. Davis.

"Sir, every word you speak is a lie."

"Right you are, my pretty miss."—Flagode.

The Little Seal.

A little seal lay in the Father's vest, a little seal stood in the stormy wind's wrath.

Tears dried, dried off the winter's slate.

A little cough started, tea only light.

A little pain came and began to grow.

The winter's slate was broken, teeth clenched,

EASTERN KENTUCKY.

WHAT OUR NEIGHBORS ARE DOING.
Compiled by County Correspondents, and Cut and Condensed from Our Contemporaries.

MORGAN COUNTY,
Special Correspondence.]

GRASSEY CREEK, Jan. 2.—Your correspondent, Blurt, who hails from East, assures us of a long time past, and capturing of all news, says he hopes we will shed our wing feathers soon. Now, we have examined our letter of Dec. 19th, which had reference to, and there is not a single item in it from his territory. We suppose he has referred to the movements of Dave Bush, while he was with an army, within three miles of this place, and was carried to his place of residence on this creek, and remains there yet. We think Blurt hardly knows where his territory, as he calls it, is. As to our feathers, we will tend to them, and try to drop them at the right time. You bet.

You are requested to spend several days at West Liberty last week, the guest of John Carter and wife. John is a good fisher and his wife is a splendid cook, consequently we like to stop with him. While at that point we met H. E. Peirce, formerly of Hazel Green, and at present a salesman for Cox & Co., of West Liberty. He was greatly pleased and surprised when Hazel Green.

Married.—On the 20th of the residence of the bride's father, N. E. Eugene, C. C. Long to Miss Ann Fugate, Rev. Campbell, of Wolfe county, officiating. The groom is a son of George Long, of Wolfe county, and is a nice young man. The bride is a lady and is worthy of a good husband. We wish them success through life.

Attended A. M. these court last Wednesday. There were several litigated cases before the court which it took two days to get through with. While there we met Judge Levi Kash, of Wolfe county, who was employed as attorney for some of the litigants. The Judge is a fine man and a lawyer.

A long letter known as Dick Phillips, passed through here last Friday on route home from Lexington, Ky. Dick says there is a fair prospect for the extension of the Coal road to Hazel Green in the near future. We had rather see that to hear it told off.

Wm. Toliver will erect a large store house in this place in the year future. Bill is a young and promising man, his son, Alex, who is his sales-man, is a reader of THE HERALD; consequently we predict for him success.

Wm. Havens and Dan Stamps will start to Breathitt county tomorrow to buy some hogs, and will drum for THE HERALD also.

Old Uncle John Wheeler not expected to live but a few days. He is very old, and is very low with fever.

Charlie Clegg, who has been serving as judge of the U. S. Court at Covington, has returned home.

Sime Parrott and wife, of East, were visiting relatives and friends in this locality last week.

W. W. Ferguson, of Sonoma, California, was here last week visiting relatives.

Wm. Penix, of Frenchburg, was here last Thursday on business.

ON THE WING.

East, Jan. 2.—Mr. and Mrs. Frank Sample gave a New Years dinner Sunday, and those of this place who attended ed returned looking as though they had been well fed.

The Baptist Church, which formerly met at Flat Gap, near this place, will from now on meet at the new church at this place, as they are assisted in building it.

James Dennis, one of the hunting company of this place, killed an owl last night, and it weighed one and a half feet from tip to tip of wings.

Students from all parts of the country came flocking in today to attend Mrs. Mary Nickell's Select School taught at this place.

George Niles, the colored school teacher in this vicinity, has bought a lot in town and will build on it in the spring.

W. B. Lykins is thinking of locating at West Liberty to practice law.

W. B. Lykins and wife are visiting relatives in Tom's Branch.

Mrs. J. M. Pieratt, of whom we wrote last week, is still quite ill.

Born—Last week to the wife of Granville Good, a girl.

Read The Death Roll.

Which the bills of mortality of any large city may be fully designated, and you will find that renal and vesical maladies, that is to say, those that affect the kidneys or bladder, are the most frequent—so far almost said—predominance. Bright's disease and diabetes in the chronic stage are rarely cured, and gravel, catarrh of the bladder and ureters, slay many. Yet at the outset, when the trouble merely amounts to inactivity of the organ involved, the disease can be banished by a pleasant vent twice and three times. Hester's Stomach Bitters, which imparts the requisite amount of tone to the organs, without over exciting them, and the use of which is convenient, and involves no elaborate preparation. Dyspepsia, a usual concomitant of renal complaints, and debility, which is very invariably prodigious, are remedied by it. So also are constipation, malarial, rheumatic and nervous ailments.

LEE COUNTY.

[Special Correspondent.]
BRENTWOOD, KY., Dec. 20.—James K. Roberts returned this week from Frankfort and other points below. He tells that there is no doubt about the building of the Louisville, Cincinnati & Virginia railroad, now. There will be four tracks. Hands put men on the road after the 1st January, and the work pushed rapidly.

Rev. F. Wilcox and Hart Witt, of Estill county, who have been working on the Episcopal school building at this place, are spending the holidays at their homes.

John Pryse and Misses Lee and Nancy Brown, of this place, are visiting friends at Pittsburgh and East Bernard, Laurel county.

Thos. Sewell, of Doylesville, passed through town today on his return from Breathitt county, where he had been several days.

Hon. R. C. Hill, Representative-elect from this district, left last Tuesday for Frankfort, where the Legislature meets today.

An old house in Prater was blown down a few days ago, killing its owner and his cattle that had gone into it for shelter.

Miss Alice Dugg and Laura Bullock, of Booneville, were visiting Mrs. Ella Pryse, of this place, during the week.

Miss Lillie Walton, of London, this county, was visiting friends here last week.

There is some talk of there being a Republican paper started at this place.

Thus Johnson, of Wolfe county, was in attendance at County Court last day.

Deputy Collector, Hiram Hogg, of Booneville, was in town during the week.

The Practitioner of E. & M. gave a sun and moon lecture on 27th ult.

There was a Christmas tree at the Chapel, in Breathitt, Wednesday night.

There was quite a large crowd in town Tuesday, Quadrant Court day.

Hon. David Price, of Estill county, was in Breathitt County Court day.

The thermometer registered 30° below zero Thursday morning.

Geo. Maxwell, of Red River, was in Breathitt this week.

W. J. Lamson came up from Ford in few days since.

Bob Smith, of Irvine, was in town last week. JOHN HENRY.

Enjoy Life.

What a truly beautiful world we live in! Nature gives us grandeur of mountain, plain, gulf and ocean, and thousands of means of enjoyment. We can desire no better when in perfect health; but how often do the majority of people feel like giving it up, disheartened, disconsolate, and hopeless with despair. When there is no occasion for this feeling, as every sufferer can easily obtain similar temporary proof, that Green's Angustia Flower, will make them free from disease, as when born. Desperado and Liver Cure will cure the direct cause of seventy-five per cent of maladies, and will remove Indigestion, Sick Headache, Congestion, Nervous Prostration, Dizziness of the Head, Palpitation of the Heart, and other distressing symptoms. Three doses of Angustia Flower will prove its wonderful effect. Sample bottles, 10 cents. Write it.

He Laughs Best Who Laughs Last.

Hon. W. F. Culver has been acquitted of all indiscretion in that little scandal in which it was published that there was a "woman in the case." The man who started the story has been entirely interviewed up one side and down the other, and it is evident the man's particular friend said it. He solemnly swears that he never said it. Not only this; but he tears his hair, and reads his lines, and the exclamation that he "never saw anything improper." So another "he is dead," and the Kentucky Constitution comes in with the verdict, "not guilty."

Exposure to rough weather, getting wet, and being kept long hours in the saddle, are the contrivances of disease of the kidneys and bladder. As a preventive, and for the cure of all kidney and liver trouble, use the following remedy. Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Balsam, $1.00 per bottle. Sold by G. B. Swango, Hazel Green.

There will be a meeting of the citizens of this county at the court house Thurs day, Jan. 4th, 1888, at 7 o'clock to take into consideration the extension of the coal road to Jackson, Breathitt county, Ky., and a branch road intersecting it at Jackson, leading to the coal fields of West Kentucky, Morgan county. Esq. Jas. Clark, who has been corresponding with Mr. C. P. Huntington through General Echo, on this subject, will address the meeting and present a proposition with authority—Southland Democrat.

Liver exposure to cold winds, rain, bright light, or mud, may bring on inflammation and soreness of the eyes. Dr. J. H. McLean's Strengthening Eye Salve will subdue the inflammation, cool and soothe the nerves, and strengthen the skin and falling eye sight. 25 cents a box. Sold by G. B. Swango, Hazel Green.
